It is generally acknowledged that deterministic formulations of dynamical phenomena in the social sciences need to be treated differently from similar formulations in the natural sciences. Social science phenomena typically defy precise measurements or data collection that are comparable in equations are, in general, far more difficult to solve than the linear difference equations we considered in Section 1.4; in fact, many nonlinear difference equations are not solvable in terms of the elementary functions of calculus.

What is the difference between linear and non linear

A linear equation is always a polynomial of degree 1 (for example  $x+2y+3=0$ ). In the two dimensional case, they always form lines; in other dimensions, they might also form planes, points, or hyperplanes.

Linear difference equation Wikipedia

Difference equations are used in a variety of contexts, such as in economics to model the evolution through time of variables such as gross domestic product, the inflation rate, the exchange rate, etc. They are used in modeling such time series because values of these variables are only measured at discrete intervals.

The Difference between Linear and Nonlinear Regression

The difference between linear and nonlinear regression models isn't as straightforward as it sounds. You'd think that linear equations produce straight lines and nonlinear equations model curvature. Unfortunately, that's not correct. Both types of models can fit curves to your data so that's not the defining characteristic. In this post, I'll teach you how to identify linear and nonlinear regression models.

What Is the Difference between Linear and Nonlinear

Previously, I've written about when to choose nonlinear regression and how to model curvature with both linear and nonlinear regression. Since then, I've received several comments expressing confusion about what differentiates nonlinear equations from linear equations.

Linear vs nonlinear differential equation Mathematics

The first time a term is non-linear, then the entire equation is non-linear. Remember that the  $x$ 's can pretty much do or appear however they want, since they're independent. Which means if you can't tell just by glancing, try to group all your  $y$  terms to one side and then analyse them.
